A special meeting of the stockholders of the Cross Manufacturing Company is called to Le Leid January 29, 1846, WED-NESDAY at 3 p. m., at the office of the company, 107 King street, Alexandria, Va. for the purpose of rouganizing the board of directors. W. A. 118NEY, 1888 ettary.

HUGH.

A blizzard was raging across the plain The wind blew harshly and bitterly. The snow fell in blinding sheets.

With his feet on the grate, his pipe in his mouth. High Vincent sat, ensconced from the storm. By his side was piled a huge stack of periodicals. Books in rude cases stood against the wall. Deer heads valls. The room lacked the prettiness of reassement that a woman's hand imparts. Beside the open fire lay a large St. Bernard. Vincentiaged with the magazines. Their brilliam covers of white and gold, decorated with holly, caught his attention. Christmas! Why, it was Christmas Eve! How many years had passed since he had thought of that day! All the sad recollections of his life clustered about that day. His ather had died at Christmas, and she--

Unnoticed the books dropped to the floor. He sat paring intently into the flame. Could it be nineteen years ago that be had withdrawn from the society of men weinen? How the time had slipped away! His pipe, his dog, his books and business had so filled the time that he and not observed its lapse.

A cousin connected with a publishing se supplied him with all the best litrature. How kind Hal had been! His visits were really the bright spots in his gray exence. Hal understood.

The wind walled a homesick strain and Hugh scowled at the fire. His outdoor life, his regular habits and healthy living had heated time. He looked barely thirty, while fact he was forty-two. His was a goodly fee to look upon—calm, strong and hand-hts of her invaded his peace. What Thoughts of her invaded his peace. At look he had been to stake his life on the lickle fancy of five feet of womanhood; Beautiful little Neil! It was under the misdetoe that he had seen her first. With the money of youth he had picked her up and From that moment he had covfrom that holines had promised or his own. The light felt upon ed in its soft, dark hair.

"Nell" he whispered, hoarsely.
Calling his servants, he worked over her until he restored her to consciousness.
High's heart seemed like a dead thing.
What holesw mouzery was this?
He watched her as she sapt. The deep the valched her as see aspe. The valched her has a form no larger than a child's. The face must be Nell's! Without a word she opened her eyes and found his fixed upon her face. He could not think, could not reason. Who was see,

"You have heard of Hugh Vincent?"

"I am taking him a message."
"Little girl, I am he."
"You-ah-you are worthy the love my mother hore you. She sent me to her father. She never saw him after she marped. I was to tell him to tell you all That she married my father to save his honor. You will understand it was about some public funds. Yes, I see, you apprehend it all. She talked of you so much, and when she died I placed the miniature locket she always wore above her heart. The last words she said were: "Tell Hugh I will await him in heaven. Teach him to forgive, Nell."

Nell's eyes were wet. Hugh's head bowed on his hand, and the pent-up feelings scened to read his soul.

They became wonderfully well acquainted that night. The next day dawned clear, and llugh sent her to the fort, where anxious hearts were waiting her coming in hopeless

A year has passed a way and it had made a difference in Hugh Vincent. Every week, whether it was answered or not, a letter came from Nell. He had grown restless as the cold weather advanced and resolved to accept Halls off-repeated invitation to visit

New York.

He went and was glad he did. New Year's eve found him at a reception. He hardly knew himself in evening dress. He met many bright people and felt much at home among them.

Alone for a moment he stepped in the con-Alone for a moment he stepped in the con-servatory. There, beside a here palm, stood a dainty figure in black. Hugh forgot his 40-odd years as he looked at her face. His Nell! The Nell of loring ago! A great pain filled his heart. All the love he bore Nell her daughter had awakened in all its ac-quired strength. After all, life was not worth living.

She saw him standing there, with his love shining in his eyes—the strained despair of hopeless affection. Tears suffused her sweet, brown eyes as she came and laid her tiny hands on his arm. With her quick tact the guessed his secret. The clock struck 12. She smiled as she spoke, then
